Third Quarter 2016 Weather(ly) Report October 2016

With Halloween around the corner, investors are hoping for more treats than tricks in historically shaky October markets. With U.S. Elections looming in early November and the Federal Reserve's deferral of a rate rise to possibly later this year, markets and investors are looking for guidance on where to seek positive returns. As 2016 comes into the final stretch, investors are examining a number of potential outcomes involving policy, politics and profits before drawing investment conclusions. Central banks around the world are keeping rates low while scouring their tool box to help form their monetary policy into 2017. Global political changes are also causing uncertainty, as the Brexit outcome elicited populist tremors, with specific concerns about Eurozone stability ("hard" vs. "soft" Brexit) along with potential parallel outcomes from the U.S. Electorate and accompanying fiscal policy. Corporate profits and a potential slowdown in growth and productivity also are hanging in flux; many arguments involved the paradigm of increases in technological efficiencies yet decreases in productivity in manufacturing. As you would expect all three P's are interrelated (policy, politics, and profits).

The Federal Reserve has continued on their course of "all talk, no action." At the beginning of 2016, the Fed "dot plot" indicated the number of Fed rate rises at four for the year. As of this writing, there is a 60% market prediction placed on one Fed rate rise, likely in December 2016. The Fed's dual mandate of unemployment (4.9% vs 4.8% target) and inflation (1.7% vs 2% target) has continued to contribute heavily on the Fed's "no action" at this juncture. We see investors' expectations of continued low interest rates and inflation to be misplaced. As oil prices shifted into higher gear, hovering around $50 per barrel after OPEC production talks, we see the impact on inflation and consumer purchases (autos, real estate, etc.). With the scenario of rising inflation in mind, we have purchased 5-year Treasury Inflation Protected Securities (TIPS) to help increase credit quality and insulate portfolios for the future.

For the year, oil services rallied up 33.95% and oil sectors up 19.9%, both have been stellar performers, with small-cap 11.4% and mid-cap 12.4% performance close behind. While dividend stocks have been standout returning 17.13% year to date, their high valuations came into question during quarter three. Value stocks at 10% have continued to outperform growth at 6%, year to date, and real estate returned 12.52%, however both domestic and global RE showed some weakness in the third quarter. Disappointing returns were generated by both healthcare 1.35% and biotech -14.22% during the year. Gold remains a wildcard for 2016 with huge swings in price seen throughout the year. We continue to position clients with a domestic dividend orientation given continued U.S. dollar strength. We have married this approach with selective investments in Europe/midcap exposure and low volatility broad based emerging market investments. We expect Federal tax codes to change with either U.S. President elect, also heavily dependent on U.S. voters' choices and which parties take or maintain control of the House and the Senate. Changes to Federal income tax rates, potential caps on municipals and estate tax exclusions will all factor into investment decisions, distributions, and gifting into the fourth quarter and the New Year. We look forward to working with our clients comprehensively to proactively address these changes and incorporate strategies into their existing financial and estate plans. We welcome your questions, comments, and calls.
